Lieutenant Destin Mattias had been one of Arendelle's most honorable officers. When King Runeard of Arendelle led a group of Arendellians to the celebration of the dam they had built for their neighbors, the Northuldra, Mattias was by his side.

Suddenly, fighting broke out between the Arendellians and the Northuldra! Brave Mattias took Prince Agnarr to safety before joining the battle. But then something happened. The wind rose up, fire took hold of the forest, boulders soared through the air, and the waves of the nearby fjord crashed against the shore.

The spirits of nature were angry.

The spirits created a mysterious mist that shrouded the entire forest for over thirty years, allowing no one to enter and no one to leave, until Anna and Elsa restored harmony between the Northuldra and the Arendellians.

Now, at long last, Mattias was coming home to Arendelle . . . and to those he'd left behind, like Halima. When Mattias first met her, she'd worked at Hudson's Hearth. Now, she owned it.

“A lot has changed,” Mattias said to Anna.
Anna nodded toward Halima. “And fortunately, some things haven’t.”

Though he'd grown up in Arendelle, it would take time for Mattias to familiarize himself with all the changes in the kingdom since he'd been gone. And now that Anna was queen, Arendelle looked a little different to her as well.

Anna had an idea that just might help them both.

“How about a hero’s welcome, with a guided tour of the new Arendelle?” she asked.

“A hero’s welcome is not necessary, Your Majesty, but I would certainly love the tour,” Mattias said, bowing low. “And perhaps we could take photographs along the way?”

“I think that’s a great idea! And call me Anna,” she said.
Mattias agreed. Soon, he and Anna began their tour of Arendelle with Finn, the royal photographer, joining them.

Anna and Mattias stopped first at the town square.

“I used to sail paper boats in this fountain,” Anna said.
“So did your father,” said Mattias. “I saw him here on occasion fishing soggy boats from the water.”

Mattias smiled. “Whenever I came to the town square with my father, we stopped here, too. He would let me toss in coins and make a wish.”

Just then, a familiar smell caught Mattias's attention.
Anna took a whiff and instantly recognized the overpowering odor of lutefisk coming from the fishmonger's shop.
"That brings back memories," she said.

Mattias's face softened. "My parents served fish almost every day. Dried fish, fish soups, smoked fish."

Anna giggled. "That is a lot of fish!"

Mattias nodded. "What I wouldn't give for a big meal with my family right now."

"Would you settle for a fish-kabob with me instead?" asked Anna.

The two went inside the shop and enjoyed a snack.

As they walked on, the tower bell began to toll.
The sound brought back another memory for Anna.

“When I was little,” she recalled, “I played by myself in the castle. When that bell rang, I would rush to the window and imagine what it was like in the world outside.”

“Whenever I heard it, it always told me it was time to come home,” Mattias added.

They walked the rest of the day, rediscovering the Arendelle they had called home since they were children. As the sun began to hide behind the mountains, their path led them past the new statue of King Agnarr and Queen Iduna as young children.

Mattias and Anna stopped at the same time.

"I miss them," Anna said quietly.

Mattias knew how she felt. "My father always said, never take the good for granted, because just when you think you've found your way, life will throw you onto a new path."

Anna smiled in wonder as she reflected on the amazing journey from the castle . . .

to the Enchanted Forest . . .

... and finally to the throne as Arendelle's
new queen.

"We've both been on quite a path, Mattias," Anna said.

"Indeed, Your Maj—Anna," he replied. "It's been quite an adventure."

"And in the end, it led us to the most wonderful place of all: home," said Anna.

Later, Anna and Mattias looked at the photos they had taken that day. A lot certainly had changed. But fortunately, the most important things, like friendship, the love of family, and the feeling of home, never would.
